9/11 MEMORIAL DISPLAY

For the 3rd year, a 9/11 memorial display will be at the Town Plaza and Courthouse lawn from Sept 10 through Sept 13, 3 pm. During the day there will be someone on hand if you have questions about the display, or at night it will be lit up with lighting.

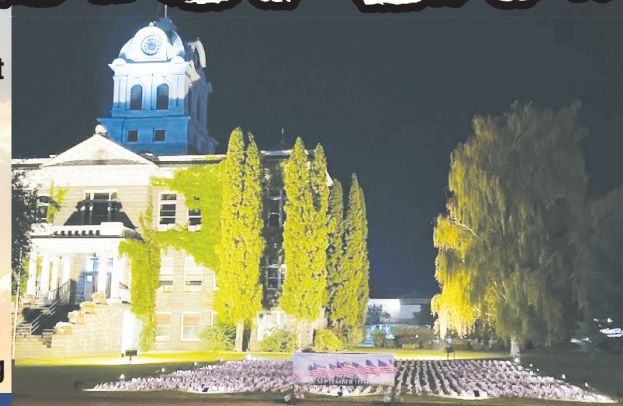

The display features canvas prints, police officer memorial, flag of heroes, original newspapers from 9/11 as well as 2977 flags representing lives lost in the 9/11 attacks.

Roland and Mona Glade, who moved to Prineville in 2016, proudly share this display with the community.

Chuck Pore was a Lake County Deputy Sheriff and American Patriot. This display was one of his passions, since the 10th anniversary of 9/11, he created and presented this on the Courthouse lawn every year in Lakeview, Oregon. Roland and Mona, along with others, helped with the event every year. Chuck passed away on his 65th birthday in 2020. His wife, Jenn, gifted the Glades with Chucks project.

Roland and Mona were volunteer EMTs and structural firefighters for the Lakeview area for many years until they retired. Roland is a retired fire chief for Thomas Creek/Westside RFPD.

The Glades believe it is important to continually bring to the forefront the memory of the tragic happenings of 9/11. They consider it a privilege to share this significant historical event with the community. Roland and Mona are grateful for the generous support and sponsorship provided by God's Country Photography. They are grateful for the support from the community as well.

The Pathways We Learn

You always know when summer is drawing to a close. We kick it off with Memorial Day and, around here, the fall school year starts moving into action right after Labor Day. I find it fun to watch how pathways change when there's such a pivot into a new school year. Every student is starting a new grade level. Some may be moving from intermediate school to high school. A whole new pathway develops from the year before. Maybe there's a different bus, a different time, or even a new route to school. There will be new pathways to completely different classrooms. And for some, it's first grade and their introduction to the first of twelve years of school pathways.

School becomes an interesting study in how pathways begin forming lives. Regular daily classes lead to after-school activities, homework leads to weekends, and eventually those daily routines begin shaping who we become. It changes life for parents, too. Summer schedules suddenly give way to new times, new places, practices, pickups and routines. I'd venture to say that when school starts, there's an uptick in pathway production!

And here's the part I find interesting. Those pathways don't stop when we graduate. They simply become harder to see. Jobs. Families. Friends. Moves. New opportunities. New places. We're still choosing pathways every day. To be young again... Would we have changed some of the pathways we chose? Maybe. But I wonder how many of those very pathways brought us exactly where we are today.

The Cheez Doodle Principle

Recently, I estimated that I've packed 2,179 school lunches. That's something like 1,084 peanut butter and jelly, 829 tuna, 45 egg salad, 143 bologna and 78 unidentified. Only 1,822 of those were actually eaten by my children.

Of the 2,179 carefully packed pieces of fruit I've lovingly included for balanced nutrition, I'd say most, if not all, are now compost at the bottom of some landfill. Add the thousands of carrot sticks, dozens of cherry tomatoes and scores of cheese chunks that go directly from lunch box to trash can, and I have 2,179 reasons to sleep in.

The only foods I'm certain get eaten are the factory-packaged, artificially colored and flavored, chemical infested, sugar and fat-laden goodies that I warn the lunch-box carrier not to eat until after the healthy stuff is gone (which kids define as wadded up, smashed beyond recognition and soaked with milk before being thrown away).

That leaves me to conclude that if you are what you eat, then my children are Cheez Doodles and Ho-Ho's.

I have other options in the Lunch Box Game. I could stay in bed, forget about packing lunches, and look like the Joan Crawford of all mothers - or pack what they do eat - namely, junk food. That might win points with my kids, but word would leak out and I'd become the dreaded "other kids' mom," as in, "Other kids' oms pack candy bars and fried pies in their lunch boxes."

I could make them eat cafeteria food, but as I've been duly told, "Cafeteria food is garooooossss." Case closed.

That leaves packing the lunch box.

As a veteran packer, I've observed several Lunch-Box Laws and Principles:

The Law of Negative Consumption: Simply stated, expensive sandwich fillings such as roast beef or honey-glazed ham never get eaten. Out-of-season fruit gets sat upon the bus. The last bagel that you secretly coveted but gave to your child gets immediately drenched with red Hawaiian Punch.

The Law of Unbearable Temptation: This occurs whenever a child is confronted with a food having a higher play-with-ability factor than eat-ability factor. These include raisins, which get arranged barricade-style then flicked across the table; bananas, which are used as guns and/or nonreturnable boomerangs; and marshmallows, which occasionally get eaten, but only after the child stuffs them all into his cheeks at once.

The Law of Leakability: This law states that even if you wrap your child's field-trip permission slip/report/card/school picture carefully in triple plastic bags before putting it inside his lunch box, his leak-proof factory-sealed boxed drink will leak, destroying everything in its wake.

The Law of "Oh, No!": Under this law, soda in a thermos explodes, Jell-O melts and mustard permanently attaches itself to white clothing.

The Principle of "Go Figure": Ziploc bags neither zip nor lock when in a child's possession. Metal spoons and expensive plastic containers never come home, but disposable plastic spoons and Cool Whip containers do. The same kid who won't eat a broken potato chip at home will smash a bag of chips into chip dust...then eat it with a spoon. Go Figure.

There is a bright side. Even if my children never eat the thousands of lunches I pack for them during their school careers, my efforts are not in vain. I'm reminded of a phrase I've heard - "When you put your whole heart into something, even if it's overlooked or under appreciated, you can smile and know you've given the best of you to the person receiving it!"

There's also an end in sight! My last child graduates next year. Until then, I'll just take things one day at a time. Meanwhile, pass the Cheez Doodles, the bus is almost here!

A little boy rushed home from Sunday school and ran in to his mother and said, "Mommy! Mommy! Did you know that they had Honda cars back in the Bible days?" His mother looked at him puzzled and said, "Son, that can't be. Where did you hear such a thing?" Her son replied, "Our Sunday school teacher said that one of those guys in the Bible said, 'when we go we'll all go in one Accord.'"

Back at the country store, the store clerk had been instructed by the owner to help enforce the new "No Smoking" ordinance. That afternoon, a man walked in enjoying a smoke. "Sir, I'm sorry, but you'll have to put out your cigarette," the clerk requested. The customer said, "Well, you sell them in this store don't you?" The clerk said, "Yes! But we also sell Ex-Lax, and you don't see anyone in here enjoying that, do you?"

Sam the Tomcat was scurrying all over the neighborhood. Down the alleys, up the fire escapes, down stairways and hurrying into cellars. A concerned friend and neighbor knocked on the owner's door and said, "Your cat is running all over the neighborhood as if he were mad!"

"I know!" the owner replied. "He is mad. We had him 'fixed' and he's been running round canceling engagements."

Little Johnny was on his way to school one day but decided to take a shortcut across a farmer's field instead of using the road. On his way he tore his pants going through a barbed wire fence. He mended his britches the best he could and went to school.

As he was arriving late, the teacher said, "Johnny, I see you're a little behind this morning!" To which Johnny replied, "Yea, but you wouldn't if I had another safety pin!"
