BE MINDFUL ALWAYS

YOU DON'T KNOW WHAT SOMEONE IS DEALING WITH....
COULD BE GRIEF, DEPRESSION, ANXIETY, OVERLY TIRED, ETC...
ALWAYS EXERCISE KINDNESS IN ACTION & WORDS

Kindness is a small, simple act..... Always remember that everyone has battles they are fighting and sometimes ONE simple act makes every amount of difference for someone. A kind word, a smile, holding the door open, paying for the coffee behind you, leaving a larger tip than usual.....what ever it is, do it with purpose. You never know when that one simple thing will be the saving grace for someone. And...as always....don't judge anyone who needs to mask up, sanitize or distance themselves in order to do their best for sickness prevention and/or spreading. Again, none of us know what someone else is going through!

What's Around

When responding to an ad - be mindful of the time you call/text - not everyone has the same schedule and when you call/text late at night, it is troublesome. Some people must keep their phones on during their sleep time for emergency contact purposes.....please be respectful. Thank you, Capri

The Pathways of a Season

Fall is here. It has always been my favorite season. Maybe that has something to do with being born on September 23, just as summer begins handing things over to fall. Or maybe I simply like what happens when the world starts changing around me.

I've been thinking that every season has its own pathways. Summer may lead us to a nearby lake, to paddleboards, a place along the shore, hot dogs over an open fire and eventual dark skies above us.

Fall changes the route. A walk through the park or a drive without much of a destination becomes something different as changing trees leave their indelible ink on the mind's eye.

Winter may take us to the mountains, where skis and snowboards carve pathways that can never be perfectly followed again. Another skier crosses them. Snow covers them. Overnight, a groomer erases them. For a little while, though, they were ours.

Then comes spring. January 1 may mark the beginning of a new year, but spring seems to whisper something else: It's time to carve again.

Maybe that's what seasons teach us about pathways. We return to the same lakes, roads, mountains and parks until some become traditions. But the leaves aren't the same. The snow isn't the same. The people beside us may not be the same.

Neither are we.

We may travel the same road, but we never travel quite the same pathway.

That's life.

A fish needed surgery, but didn't know if he'd be able to pay for it.

He met with the doctor to talk about how much it would cost.

"Don't worry at all," said the doctor. "I'll give you a discount on the price. I admire and respect your cousin, so I am honored to be taking care of his family. He is, beyond any doubt, an excellent sturgeon."

'Tis That Time For Mammies To Get Grammed!!!

It's a taboo subject, off-limits on a multitude of counts. We have heard them called boobies, knockers, bosoms, jugs and many more, unprintable.

Breasts are often a child's first connection with the world. Mothers feel guilt here, no matter which way the wind blows. They didn't breast feed their children. They didn't nurse them for long enough. They kept them attached to their breasts for their own needs long after it was healthy for the child. They don't want to admit that they are still nursing their six-year-old as well as the baby.

It's all about the breasts.

It's about little girls in bikinis covering up nothing at all, but yet it is the modest way to dress a girl child. It's a cultural thing, and while attitudes are different throughout the world, we still judge and are judged.

As teenagers, we either flaunt them or cover them in heavy clothing.

And we worry about them. No wonder we grow up with mixed feelings that range from shame to pride.

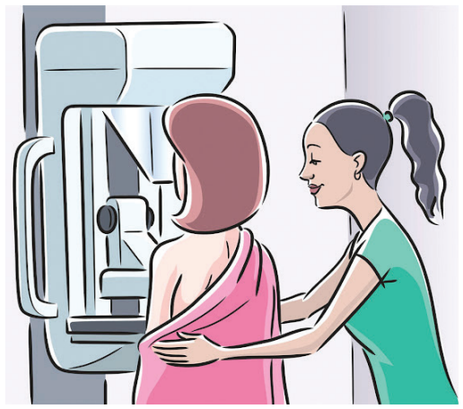

If we were on Family Feud and asked to fill in a word that goes after breast, the majority of women would say cancer. And we would win. Well, not really.

Last week, I went for my mammogram. I am fortunate that I am not shy. I can't imagine that there is much in this body of interest to any technician.

So there I was, the next victim, I mean, person, deodorant off, phone off, panic on.

Eventually, I am guided to a cubicle among cubicles with other women and told to remove everything above the waist. I can do that, but I can't tie up the gown behind my neck, so I sit, waiting to hear my name, gown half on and mostly off, with a distinct breeze where my cleavage usually is. My maracas shiver when a lady calls what I think is my name. As we are all of a certain age, many of us don't hear well, so we all run out of the changing rooms, bumping into one another. Perhaps we should all go out for coffee if the fates allow.

In yet another frigid room, I am asked to remove my hospital gown, which is, by the way, already three-quarters off.

"Your jewelery."

I am wondering what she wants to say about the necklace I have worn for forty years. Is she admiring it? I stare. "Off."

As in off with my head? She touches my necklace, and I get it.

As previously mentioned, about my inability to tie the gown around my own neck, I am the first to admit that I am not dextrous; keys and zippers are not my friends. Evidently, neither is the clasp of the chain. I feel like I am wearing sheepskin gloves as I struggle to turn the fastener around. Ten minutes later, I guess the technician can't stand it any longer, so she gives me a hand.

"Any prostheses?" I am thrilled to be able to say no. Or rather not yet.

Then her hands are all over me, adjusting me and placing little sticky post-it notes all over my bazookas. In the two years between mammograms, I had forgotten the part about being treated like a bulletin board.

She guides me to the machines where she manhandles (a funny but apt word) my breast unto a contraption three sizes too small for what is about to be inserted. Yes, I am in an awkward position, but it is necessary.

Then comes the part that I hate the most, the bit that I hadn't forgotten. And it is an unpleasant moment for someone with claustrophobia. There you stand, open to God and humanity, attached to a contrivance that is squishing your breast like a French Crepe. It's a trifle uncomfortable, but that isn't the problem. The technician leaves to go into another room to actually take the x-ray and you are stuck, not existentially or metaphorically, but actually. If that lady has a heart attack in the next room, or if there is a terrorist attack or a fire, I will be the one who shall be found dead, attached by a nipple. Of course, it lasts a second, and I am released into the land of the living before we have to do it three more times.

Eventually, I am sent back to my cubicle to wait until I am dismissed, which does not mean that I am healthy but rather that the films have been taken correctly. I hear my neighbors worrying on either side of me. We do not go out for coffee. I do not even attempt to put my necklace back on but throw it in my purse.

It's later in the evening, and I am about to take a shower. I glance into the bathroom mirror and freak out. A large rash has appeared across my chest, and panic sets in as I notice my breasts covered in huge white dots.

I have never even heard of white spots. Rashes are red, aren't they? Or they present with purple splotches? Something other than white circles.

I often do not listen when I talk to myself, but I try to. Most things can be explained easily, so my brain goes to the most obvious answer: the apparatus I was caught in gave off such large amounts of radiation that I was scalded. I picture victims of nuclear bombs.

Nope, I had just forgotten to remove all of those little stickers.

I hope I get my results soon.

A friend of mine is an officer with the police department's canine division. One evening, the officer was dispatched to the scene of a possible burglary, where he discovered the back door of the building ajar. He let the dog out of his patrol car and commanded it to enter and seek.

Jumping from the back seat, the dog headed for the building. After lunging through the doorway, the dog froze and backed out. My friend was puzzled until he investigated further. Then he noticed the sign on the building: "Veterinarian's Office."

I bought my sons a pet rabbit after they promised they would take care of it. As expected, I ended up with the responsibility. Exasperated, one evening I said, "How many times do you think that rabbit would have died if I hadn't looked after it?"

"Once," my 12-year-old son replied.
